Judge overhauls troubled Ferguson, Missouri, court

(Reuters) A new municipal judge in Ferguson, Missouri, on Monday ordered sweeping changes to court practices in response to a scathing Justice Department report following the shooting of unarmed black teenager Michael Brown a year ago. Municipal Court Judge Donald McCullin, appointed in June, ordered that all arrest warrants issued in the city before Dec. 31, 2014 be withdrawn. Defendants will receive new court dates along with options for disposing of their cases, such as payment plans or community service. Fines may be commuted for indigent people. The changes come five months after the U.S. Department of Justice strongly criticized city leaders in its report, saying the police force and court worked together to exploit people in order to raise revenue. The Justice Department specifically said Ferguson's municipal court practices caused significant harm to many people with cases pending as minor municipal code violations turned into multiple arrests, jail time, and payments that exceeded the cost of the original ticket many times over. McCullin, who is black, ordered instead that if an arrest warrant is issued for a minor traffic violation, the defendant will not be incarcerated, but will be released on their own recognizance and given another court date, the city said. "These changes should continue the process of restoring confidence in the Court... and giving many residents a fresh start," said McCullin in a statement. He added that many people who have had drivers licenses suspended will be able to obtain them and start driving again. In the past, the city's director of revenue would suspend a defendant's driver's license solely for failing to appear in court or failing to pay a fine. McCullin replaced Judge Ronald Brockmeyer who resigned after being criticized in the Justice Department report.

North, South Korea agree to defuse crisis after marathon talks

(AFP) North and South Korea reached agreement Tuesday, following marathon talks, on ending a tense military stand-off that had pushed the two rivals to the brink of armed conflict. In a joint accord, the North "expressed regret" over recent mine blasts that maimed two South Korean soldiers, while the South agreed to switch off loudspeakers blasting propaganda messages across the border. The speakers will be silenced at midday (0300 GMT) Tuesday, at which time the North will lift a "semi-war state" declared last week by leader Kim Jong-Un. The two also agreed to work towards a resumption next month of reunions for families separated by the 1950-53 Korean War, and to hold official talks in either Seoul or Pyongyang at a date to be decided. The agreement, which appeared to cover the major areas of contention, came after days and nights of grueling negotiations which began early Saturday evening in the border truce village of Panmunjom. UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon "warmly welcomed" the accord which was also published in full by the North's official KCNA news agency. South Korea's lead negotiator, National Security Adviser Kim Kwan-Jin, said the agreement would settle the current crisis and provide a "new momentum" for inter-Korean relations in the future.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Coastal morning low clouds and fog will give way to partial afternoon clearing while interior locations will remain clear through the day. Cooling temperatures will arrive mid to late week along with the possibility of rain for the weekend.

Medford Weather:

Very little will change today in comparison to yesterday, and Wednesday will be very similar to today. This means that areas that had extensive smoke on Monday are likely to have it again today through Wednesday. We expect smoke to be of most significance in the valleys, to include the Rogue Valley, during the overnight and morning hours and lesser during the later afternoons and evenings. Thunderstorm slight chances have been removed from the forecast for today and Wednesday, as conditions both days look less favorable than those observed on Monday and the fact that we had none on Monday.

Reno Weather:

High pressure centered near the four corners region will bring a continuation of the very warm temperatures this week with typical late day winds. A low pressure trough will approach the West Coast this weekend and early next week with cooler temperatures and periods of gusty winds.

San Francisco Weather:

Slightly warmer weather is expected through tomorrow as high pressure builds over the Southwestern portion of the country. Cooler conditions return late in the week along with a slight chance of rain over the northern portion of the region on Saturday as an upper level system pushes into the Pacific Northwest.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Mainly dry weather continues this week with southwesterly flow aloft across the region. Temperatures will be near normal for late August. A cooling trend is forecast for this weekend with possible showers across the far northern portion of the state.

Hanford Weather:

Mainly dry weather can be expected over the area for the next several days. Temperatures will remain near to slightly above normal as the upper-level ridge lingers over the region through much of the week. Mid-level moisture will bring some clouds to the region Tuesday and Wednesday, and possibly a stray thunderstorm to the Indian Wells Valley and Eastern Kern County desert Tuesday. Cooler weather returns for the weekend with the arrival of a low pressure system.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Some monsoonal moisture will bring a slight chance of thunderstorms to the Eastern Mountains and deserts today. Otherwise, a large upper level ridge over the four corners region will bring a warming trend through Thursday, with well above normal temperatures continuing into Friday. An upper trough moving into the Pacific Northwest over the weekend will bring a cooling trend to the forecast area.

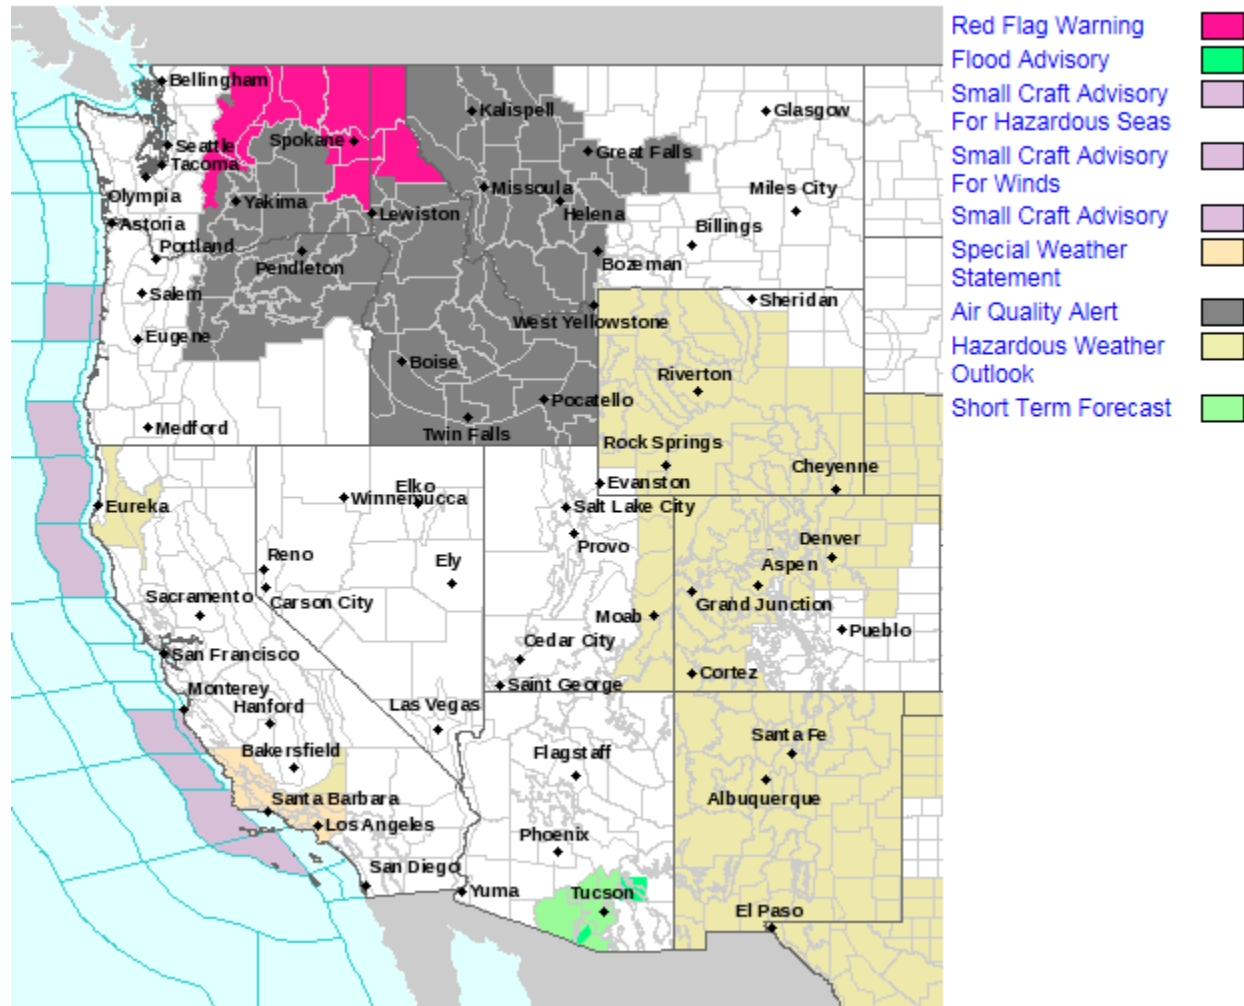

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Abundant moisture flowing around an area of high pressure will bring increased clouds today with a good chance of showers and thunderstorms...especially for the mountains and deserts. A few thunderstorms are possible over the mountains and deserts Wednesday afternoon as well. Building high pressure over the Southwest will bring much warmer weather for Thursday through Saturday with temperatures possibly getting close to record high temperatures during this period. A gradual moderation in temperatures will then ensue for early next week as an upper-level low pressure deepens along the West Coast.

Southeast California Weather:

Widespread clouds and showers are expected today with isolated thunderstorms across much of the region. Only exception will be Inyo county where conditions overall will remain dry with areas of smoke near bishop and the Owens Valley. Scattered thunderstorms remain possible on Wednesday before a gradual drying commences Thursday. Drier conditions are expected Friday through the weekend with warming temperatures area wide.
